generator[Surgical treatment of severe left ventricular outflow tract obstruction]. Eighteen patients underwent mitral valve repair or redo-surgery for the obstructive type of left ventricular outflow tract (LVOT) obstruction. The age ranged from 28 to 78 years (mean = 56), and 16 of them were male. The valve diseases were rheumatic in 11, stenosis in 4 and insufficiency in 3. The aortic regurgitation was grade 2 or more in 8 patients. The systolic pressure gradient across the valve ranged from 50 to 100 mmHg (mean = 86), and all the patients had stenosis in LVOT. The mitral stenosis was severe in the patients who had severe systolic pressure gradient (> 80 mmHg), and it was associated with the mitral regurgitation in most of them

RelationQ: What is the difference between these realloc's I have this function: void strcpy(char *dest, char *src); void strcpy(char dest[], char src[]); void strcpy(char *dest, char *src, size_t length); and I need to know the differences between these three. I want to use realloc to increase the buffer for my destination, but I am not sure how many times I need to call this function. A: The first one copies an existing string into a buffer you provide, and as such can be used for literally any buffer. The second one is mainly meant for holding a string (as it uses the string's size as the new buffer size). The last one is as noted in the name, a copy of the string that can vary in size. Anyway, the main difference is that the first function can be called multiple times while the other two cannot. With that in mind, if you know the exact size of the string before the copy, the first two can be used to write the string in a buffer and ensure that the size of the buffer is correct. Police responded to a report of a shooting at a house party in the 600 block of Woodbine Drive at about 1:45 a.m. Saturday and found the man's body about 15 minutes later. Witnesses told police that they heard 10 to 20 shots fired as the victim was standing next to a front door, Hackensack police spokesman Sgt. Anthony Wampler said. The man, whose name has not been released, was shot multiple times and was taken to a nearby hospital, where he was pronounced dead. No arrests
